She spent most of her childhood and early adult years in Anse-Rouge until 1965 she met the love of her life, Dominique Alexandre. The two began their lives together and very soon after that they had their first child. However, few years later Dominique passed away in 1973, leaving France as the sole provider for the children. In the US, she settled in Pompano Beach, Florida, where she worked for various employers while doing business in Haiti until she was able to relocate her children to live with her.
