“ I went to high school with Justin. I have vivid memories of seeing him in the hallways at South Plantation. He always carried himself with purpose, walking like he had somewhere important to be. He had a sense of style that stood out, always well-dressed and confident. I admired his presence and how he approached life with determination. My heart goes out to his family especially his children. May Justin rejoice in the Lord's glory!

“ To my old friend Justin Malone,

I've been thinking about those middle school/early high school days we shared—those mornings hanging out at your house, when music and life felt so fresh. I'll never forget us vibing to Biggie's Life After Death album, watching music videos before we even thought about heading to school at your crib. It was always the same crew—Ray, Roger Magno, you, and me—just rotating that one Nautica Polo or a pair of Karl Kani jeans like it was some kind of game. That was us!

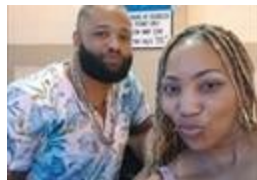

Of course, we'd miss the bus more often than not, and there we were, squeezing into Roger's mom's black Toyota Celica, hoping she wouldn't mind one more time. After school, we'd hang out at the bus stop for hours, not really in a rush to go anywhere, just living in the moment with Johanna Torres and Lishan.

I'm sorry we didn't stay close after all of that, but the memories will always stay with me. You'll forever hold a spot in my life for those good times we shared. Rest easy, my friend.
