“ Easter Sunday Dinner

Easter Sunday afternoon in the early 70s. Tim, Al, and Sweat have one Goal, Easter Sunday dinner at each Friends home.

First meal was at his moms house (full plate), then on to Al's moms house (half plate) and lastly to my mom's house (quarter plate). The thing that amazed me was that Tim had a full plate at each house.

I just looked and wondered, "where did he put it all". It was like watching things go into Al Capone's vault, or for you folks that watch Doctor Who, he was larger on the inside than the outside.

It was an Easter Sunday for the Ages. Our moms did not mind as long as we followed the golden rule. Do not waste any food, what you take you eat. Tim had us covered.

As we got older and got on with life our parents aged too. I would worry about my dad doing lawn service in the Florida heat. I worried a lot less when I knew Tim was working with him, they would watch out for each other.

My dad is gone and now so is Tim. I know they are still watching out for each other and watching Clint Eastwood in "A Fist Full of Dollars one.. more.. time.
